1. INTRODUCTION

The Complaint and two supplements (collectively, the “Complaint”) allege that Donald J.
Trump, Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. and Bradley T. Crate in his official capacity as treasurer (the “Committee”), The Trump Organization, and Mar-A-Lago Club, LLC (collectively, the “Respondents”) violated the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended (the “Act”), and Commission regulations by converting campaign funds to the personal use of Trump and members of his family. As explained below, we recommend that the Commission dismiss the allegation that Respondents violated 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b) and 11 C.F.R. § 113.2 regarding one campaign event at the Trump International Hotel. As to the remaining allegations, we recommend that the Commission find no reason to believe that Respondents violated the personal use provisions by (1) promoting properties and products owned by, or associated with, The Trump Organization; (2) making payments to Trump family members or to organizations owned by, or associated with, The Trump Organization; or (3) overcharging the Committee for events at the Mar-A-Lago Club.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

At the time of the Complaint’s filing, Donald J. Trump was the sole member of Trump Organization LLC, as well as a candidate for President. Trump also held a 100% ownership interest in the other entities named in the Complaint: Tag Air, Inc.; Mar-A-Lago Club, LLC; Trump Restaurants LLC; Trump Tower Commercial LLC; Trump National Golf Club; and Trump International Golf Club.

1 At the time the Complaint was filed, the Committee’s treasurer was Timothy Jost. Bradley T. Crate has since been substituted and is the current treasurer. See Statement of Organization Amendment 4, Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. (Jan. 20, 2017).

The Complaint alleges that President Trump promoted Trump Organization products and properties at various events during the 2016 presidential campaign. It argues that Trump’s campaign events served as promotional events for his businesses, thereby violating the Act’s prohibition on converting campaign funds to personal use. In support, the Complaint relies on news articles that describe the events as “infomercials” and sales pitches for his products and properties. Specifically, the Complaint alleges that Trump promoted his businesses during five campaign events: (1) a March 8, 2016, post-primary press conference during which he promoted Trump-branded steaks, water, wine, and Trump Magazine; (2) a March 21, 2016, press conference held at the then-unfinished Trump International Hotel in Washington, D.C., during which Trump called the hotel “one of the great hotels of the world” and gave a tour to reporters; (3) a May 5, 2016, campaign rally and interview during which Trump criticized the judge presiding over a suit against Trump University; (4) a June 24, 2016, press conference and ribbon-cutting ceremony at Trump Turnberry in Ayrshire, Scotland, during which Trump described the course as “phenomenal”; and (5) a September 16, 2016, event at the Trump International Hotel during which Trump called the hotel one of the best in the world and took photographers and video camera operators on a tour.

The Complaint also alleges that Trump business entities and family members personally profited from Committee expenditures. The Complaint lists payments disclosed in the Committee’s 2016 June Monthly Report to six entities associated with Trump:

- $423,371.70 to Mar-A-Lago
- $349,540 to Tag Air, Inc.
- $125,080.31 to Trump Restaurants LLC
- more than $170,000 to Trump Tower Commercial LLC
- $29,715 to Trump National Golf Club
- $35,845 to Trump International Golf Club (collectively, the “Trump Entities”).

The Complaint further alleges that payments of $5,000 to Eric Trump Wine Manufacturing LLC, and payments to Trump’s sons for campaign travel constituted personal use. The Complaint concedes that rental payments to Trump entities are not inherently prohibited, but argues that the 14 Id.

“magnitude” of these payments in relation to the total amount the Committee spent that month (over $6.7 million) warrants “stricter scrutiny” by the Commission.15

Finally, the Complaint alleges that Trump overcharged the Committee for events held on Trump-owned properties. In support, the Complaint cites articles that contrast the $423,371 the Committee paid to Mar-A-Lago for three March 2016 campaign events held at the club with the $4,855 paid by the Republican Party of Florida for a March 2014 fundraiser.16 The Complaint claims that this disparity shows that the Committee paid more than fair market value to use the property, which constitutes personal use.17

Respondents deny that they violated the Act.18 As to the alleged promotion of Trump Organization properties, Respondents argue that the March 21, 2016, and June 24, 2016, events were not campaign-related, and the Trump Organization properly organized and paid for both.19 Respondents also contend that Trump was not prohibited from conducting business or discussing it during the campaign, and that press coverage of his business events during his presidential campaign did not transform them into campaign events.20 Respondents argue that it was

Reg. 7,862, 7,865 (Feb. 9, 1995) (hereinafter “1995 Personal Use E&J”) (explaining that a campaign committee “can continue to rent part of an office building owned by the candidate for use in the campaign, so long as the committee pays no more than fair market value for the property usage”).

18 Trump and the Committee submitted a joint response. See Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. Resp. (Oct. 6, 2016) (hereinafter “Committee Resp.”). Both Trump and the Committee received notice of the two supplemental complaints, but did not file a response to them. The Trump Organization filed a separate response following receipt of the supplemental complaints. See Trump Organization Resp. (Dec. 20, 2016) (hereinafter “Trump Org. Resp.”).

appropriate for Trump to discuss his business dealings during the campaign because his political opponents made them a campaign issue.\(^{21}\)

As to the campaign's payments to Trump's businesses and his family members, Respondents argue that the Act required them.\(^{22}\) In other words, had the Committee not made the payments, the value of the goods and services would have constituted in-kind contributions.\(^{23}\) Respondents also argue that all payments made to the Trump family and business entities were at fair market value, and the payments for family travel were proper because they were for campaign-related activities.\(^{24}\) Finally, the Trump Organization denies that the $4,855 fee charged to the Republican Party of Florida in 2014 establishes the usual rate for events held at Mar-A-Lago, and the 2016 events cost more because they were much larger.\(^{25}\)

III. LEGAL ANALYSIS

The Commission has determined that a candidate and the candidate's campaign committee have wide discretion in making expenditures to influence the candidate's election.\(^{26}\) However, the candidate and the campaign committee may not convert campaign funds to the personal use of the candidate or any other person.\(^{27}\) Campaign funds are converted to personal use if they are "used to fulfill any commitment, obligation or expense of a person that would exist irrespective of the candidate's election campaign or individual's duties as a holder of Federal office. Expenses "that would be incurred even if the candidate was not a candidate" are considered personal rather than campaign related.

Commission regulations list a number of expenditures that constitute per se personal use, but where a specific use is not listed, the Commission determines whether an expense constitutes personal use "on a case-by-case basis." The Commission has stated, however, that "[i]f the candidate can reasonably show that the expenses at issue resulted from campaign or officeholder activities, the Commission will not consider the use to be personal use."

In previous matters, the Commission considered payments to be personal use where they were used to pay for personal expenses, such as Broadway and football tickets, haircuts, credit card bills, and personal trainer payments. In contrast, the Commission found no reason to believe a candidate had violated the personal use prohibition by using campaign funds for a television ad that highlighted her experience as a restaurant owner "to amplify [her] qualifications and positions, contrasting herself from her opponent." The Commission has also advised requestors that a campaign committee may post a de minimis amount of promotional material for a candidate-authored book on its website at de minimis cost without violating the personal use restriction.34

A. Allegations Regarding Promotion of Candidate-Owned Products and Properties

The available information indicates that most of Trump's alleged promotion of his products and properties during campaign appearances were made in the context of touting his business acumen, and therefore his suitability and qualifications for office, which was an issue often raised during the campaign.35 For example, at the March 8, 2016, post-primary event at which Trump mentioned Trump steaks, water, wine, and Trump Magazine, the record indicates that Trump made these comments in response to Mitt Romney's critiques during the campaign of Trump's business record.36 Similarly, Trump's criticism of a federal judge at the May 5, 2016, campaign rally regarding a lawsuit against Trump University related to a prominent issue during his campaign.37

Regarding two other events mentioned in the Complaint, the March 21, 2016, press conference at the Trump International Hotel and the June 24, 2016, press conference at Trump 34 See AO 2011-02; see also AO 2006-07. In Advisory Opinion 2013-14 (Long) the Commission considered whether a candidate's campaign committee could distribute palm cards that referenced a candidate-authored book, but was unable to render an opinion.

35 See, e.g., Brian Gunia, Does Trump Know Business?, BALTIMORE SUN (Sept. 28, 2016), http://www.baltimoresun.com/news/opinion/oped/bs-ed-trump-business-20160928-story.html ("[T]he election has raised another equally critical question ... Is Mr. Trump a good businessman?"); see also Committee Resp. at 4 n.4 (citing multiple news articles reporting Republican politicians calling Trump's business skills into question during the 2016 campaign).

Tumberry, the Trump Organization, not the campaign, paid for and organized them. A review of the Committee’s reports supports this assertion, showing no disbursements for these events. The promotion of Trump businesses and products at these two Trump Organization events did not involve the use of “funds in a campaign account.”

However, with respect to the September 16, 2016, event, the available information indicates that the purported campaign event was devoted, at least in part, to promoting Trump International Hotel. Various news stories reported that the stated reason for the event was an announcement about President Barack Obama’s birthplace, since Trump’s statements on this topic were an issue in the campaign. Trump, however, began the event by saying, “Nice hotel. Under budget and ahead of schedule. Isn’t that nice?” He also reportedly talked about the hotel’s opening ceremony, saying, “I think it may be one of the great hotels anywhere in the world.” The next segment of the event—reportedly more than 20 minutes—was devoted to a 38 Committee Resp. at 7; Trump Org. Resp. at 3. The Complaint also appears to allege that Donald Trump’s campaign website promoted Trump Tumberry by posting a schedule on the Trump campaign’s website showing a scheduled press conference as part of the official campaign schedule. Compl. at 4. Such promotion of a private business, the Complaint claims, amounted to a conversion of funds to personal use. Id. at 4, 9. In MUR 6518 (Newt 2012), the Commission was unable to agree on whether posting a candidate’s schedule, including a candidate’s outside activities, to the campaign website violated the Act’s personal use prohibition.

40 11 C.F.R. § 113.1(g). The Complaint does not allege that the Committee received any prohibited corporate contributions from the Trump Organization at these events.

43 Id.
series of military veterans endorsing Trump, which although not the topic the media reportedly thought the event would cover, was reasonably related to the campaign. After that, Trump made a brief announcement that he believed that Obama was born in the United States. The sources cited in the Complaint acknowledge that Trump “barely spoke,” and did so for “only seconds.” Following that statement, however, Trump led camera operators—but not reporters—on a tour of the hotel. These facts support a reasonable inference that Trump used this campaign-financed event, at least in part, to promote his hotel.

This event contrasts with other situations where the Commission found that the discussion of a candidate’s business during a campaign was reasonably campaign related. In MUR 6437, for example, the candidate’s mention of her restaurant in a campaign ad was brief and bolstered her claim that her business skills made her a better candidate than her opponent. The September 16 event, however, was not supposed to focus on Trump’s business skills, yet a portion of the event was devoted to Trump complimenting his hotel and leading a press tour. Furthermore, Trump’s remarks and his tour indicate that he was not merely speaking briefly about his business skills. Although the record is not clear as to how much of the event was dedicated to Trump’s promotion of his hotel, as opposed to the campaign portion of the event, it appears that the tour and the time Trump spent touting his businesses was more significant than activities the Commission has determined would not constitute personal use. The circumstances support dismissing the violation as a matter of prosecutorial discretion. The record reflects that the event, as scheduled, was related to Trump's campaign and included Trump discussing issues in the campaign and receiving endorsements. Although the cost of the campaign event is not certain, the only disbursement to the Trump International Hotel the Committee reported around the time of the event was $13,341.88 for facility rental and catering, and the record does not indicate what expenses were attributable to Trump's promotion of the hotel. Given this uncertainty; the differing opinions as to how to properly allocate any expenses that might constitute personal use, and the somewhat modest amount at issue, we do not believe this matter warrants the use of further Commission resources.

49 Supra, n.34.

50 The present matter is distinguishable from past matters in which the Commission found reason to believe a violation occurred for the advertisement and promotion of candidate-owned businesses because in those matters the Commission determined the advertisements were contributions from the candidate-owned businesses to the campaigns. See, e.g., Factual & Legal Analysis, MUR 5410 (Oberweis); Factual & Legal Analysis, MUR 5517 (Stork). The allegations here are the reverse.

51 See 2016 Pre-General Election Report at 12843, Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. (Dec. 22, 2016). We are not aware of any other campaign events held at the Trump International Hotel, and the Committee made no other disbursements to the Trump International Hotel during this time period. It appears that the October 17 disbursement covered the expenses incurred at the September 16 event. In the context of expenses that arise from mixed personal and campaign-related travel, the Commission has determined that in order to avoid converting campaign funds to personal use, the candidate must reimburse his or her campaign committee for the incremental expenses that arise because of the portions of the event spent on personal activity. See Advisory Opinion 2002-05 (Hutchison); Factual & Legal Analysis, MUR 6127 (Obama for America); 1995 Personal Use E&J at 7869 (“Of course, the reimbursement need only cover the incremental costs of the personal activities, that is the increase in the total cost of the trip that is attributable to” the personal activities). In MUR 6511, the Commission found no reason to believe that a candidate violated the personal use prohibition by hosting a party that was both a campaign event and a personal event where the candidate “paid the additional non-campaign related costs ... with his personal funds.” Factual & Legal Analysis at 13, MUR 6511 (Andrews).

52 See Advisory Opinion 2011-02 (Brown). In Brown, the Commission was unable to approve a response regarding the proper allocation of expenses that arose out of mixed campaign and personal travel. Compare id. Agenda Draft A and id. Agenda Draft B.
Accordingly, we recommend the Commission dismiss as a matter of prosecutorial discretion the allegation that the Respondents violated 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b) and 11 C.F.R. § 113.2 by promoting the Trump International Hotel.53

B. Payments to Candidate-owned Businesses and Family Members

1. Payments for Use of Trump-Owned Properties

The Committee's payments to rent Trump properties appear to be permissible expenditures. The Commission has advised that "[a] campaign committee may [] rent, for campaign use, part of an office building owned by the candidate so long as it pays no more than the fair market value."54 The Commission has also permitted payments "for the use of [private clubs] for any costs that are ... associated only with the use of facilities for specific fundraising or other campaign events."55

The Complaint alleges that the Committee paid more than fair market value to use Mar-A-Lago.56 The Trump Organization, however, justifies the disparity between the $423,371.70 it charged the Committee and the $4,855 it charged to the Republican Party of Florida by pointing to the differences between the March 2016 campaign events and the March 2014 fundraiser.57

54 Advisory Opinion 1995-08 (Stupak); 11 C.F.R. § 113.1(g)(1)(i)(E)(2).
57 The Trump Organization contends that the 2014 Florida Republican Party event "was held outside and was attended by 50 people." Trump. Org. Resp. at 5. In contrast, the Committee events "were held in large ballrooms with sets, stages, seating, and lighting." Id. The record is not clear in regard to the number of attendees at the Committee's Mar-A-Lago events, but one was held on the evening of "Super Tuesday II," and included many members of Trump's campaign, Trump supporters, and members of the national media. See Amy Davison, Donald Trump and the Super Tuesday II View from Mar-A-Lago, NEW YORKER (Mar. 16, 2016), http://www.newyorker.com/news/amy-davidson/donald-trump-and-the-super-tuesday-ii-view-from-mar-a-lago. The Trump Organization Response also notes that the campaign paid the standard rate for the use of guest rooms at Mar-A-Lago in connection with the events. See Trump Org. Resp. at 5 n.2.
News reports and tax returns of charitable organizations that held events at Mar-A-Lago suggest that the rate the Committee paid is not obviously out of line with other larger events held at that facility.\textsuperscript{58} For example, the Palm Beach Police Foundation reported paying $235,362 in "Rent/facility costs" for their 2013 annual ball and auction.\textsuperscript{59} Respondents also note that the Complaint does not state what constitutes the "usual rate" for events held at Mar-A-Lago.\textsuperscript{60} We conclude the expenses paid to Mar-A-Lago here were reasonably related to campaign events, and we have no information suggesting that the Committee paid more than similarly sized events at the resort or more than fair market value. Likewise, there is no information to suggest, and the Complaint does not allege, that the payments to Trump Restaurants LLC, Tower Commercial LLC, Trump National Golf Club, and Trump International Golf Club were more than fair market value.

As to the payments to Tag Air, Inc., the Act contains an exception from the payment and reimbursement requirements for travel on aircraft owned by a candidate: candidates are required to reimburse the "service providers" in order to avoid receiving an in-kind contribution.\textsuperscript{61} Thus, to avoid receiving a prohibited corporate in-kind contribution from Tag Air, Inc., the Committee was required to pay "the pro rata share per campaign traveler of the costs associated with the trip ... [including] the cost of fuel and crew, and a proportionate share of maintenance costs." The Complaint does not allege that the amounts paid to reimburse Tag Air were for more than the pro rata share per campaign traveler of the costs associated with the specific trips, and there is no information in the record to support that conclusion. Accordingly, we recommend the Commission find no reason to believe Respondents violated 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b) and 11 C.F.R.

§ 113.2 in connection with these payments.

2. Payments to Trump Family Members

Finally, the Complaint alleges that the Respondents violated the Act by reimbursing members of Trump’s family for travel expenses. Travel expenses are among the type of expenses analyzed on a case-by-case basis discussed above. The Commission has previously determined that campaign funds may be used to pay for a candidate’s immediate family members to travel to participate in campaign events.

62 11 C.F.R. § 100.93(g)(1)(iii); see also Campaign Travel E&J at 63,960.
63 Between June 16, 2015, and November 28, 2016, the Committee reported 18 disbursements to Tag Air totaling $8,741,464.25. See 2016 Reports of Receipts and Disbursements, Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. For each disbursement, we do not know the numbers of trips, distance traveled, number of passengers, size of aircraft, or other similar facts, so it is difficult to assess the validity of a claim that the amount paid to Tag Air is above the pro rata share per campaign traveler of the costs associated with the trips, which again, the Complaint does not allege.
By way of rough comparison, we note that the amounts the Committee reported for air travel over the course of the campaign were not facially out of line with amounts reported by his general election opponent. See 2016 Reports of Receipts and Disbursements, Hillary for America.
64 The Complaint also alleges that Eric Trump personally benefitted because the Committee paid “Ace Specialties nearly $694,000 [during the reporting period] for campaign hats and t-shirts.” Compl. at 7. According to the Complaint, Ace Specialties is owned by a board member of Eric Trump’s charitable foundation. Id. The Complaint does not allege, and there is no information to suggest, that the Committee paid more than fair market value for the hats and shirts.
65 11 C.F.R. § 113.1(g)(1)(ii)(C).
66 See Advisory Opinion 1996-34 (Thornberry) (approving use of campaign funds for travel costs of spouse and minor children); cf. 1995 Personal Use E&J at 7,866 ("The Commission agrees ... that [in regard to salary payments] family members should be treated the same as other members of the campaign staff. So long as the.
The Committee reported disbursing $13,902 to Donald Trump, Jr., and Eric Trump a for “travel expense reimbursement” for the period covered in the Committee’s June 2016 Monthly Report. The Complaint makes no assertion that the expenses incurred were for anything other than legitimate campaign-related travel. It makes no claim that Eric Trump or Donald Trump, Jr., failed to attend campaign-related events. On the contrary, Eric Trump and Donald Trump, Jr., appear to have played a large role in Donald Trump’s campaign. Accordingly, there is no information to suggest that the travel reimbursements were made for anything other than bona fide campaign travel, and we recommend the Commission find no reason to believe Respondents violated 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b) and 11 C.F.R. § 113.2 in connection with payments for travel by Trump’s family members.

IV. RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Dismiss the allegation that Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. and Bradley T. Crate in his official capacity a treasurer, Donald J. Trump, and The Trump Organization violated 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b) and 11 C.F.R. § 113.2 in regard to the promotion of the Trump International Hotel;

2. Find no reason to believe that Donald J. Trump for President, Inc. and Bradley T. Crate in his official capacity as treasurer, Donald J.
